The Month in WordPress: August 2018

Posted September 3, 2018 by Hugh Lashbrooke. Filed under Month in WordPress.

Many of the WordPress contribution teams have been working hard on the new WordPress editor, and the tools, services, and documentation surrounding it. Read on to find out more about this ongoing project, as well as everything else that has been happening around the WordPress community in August.

WordPress 4.9.8 is Released

WordPress 4.9.8 was released at the beginning of the month. While this was a maintenance release fixing 46 bugs, it was significant for Core development because it made a point of highlighting Gutenberg — the new WordPress editor that is currently in development (more on that below).

This release also included some important updates to the privacy tools that were added to Core earlier this year.

Planning Begins for the Next Global WordPress Translation Day

The Global WordPress Translation Day is a 24-hour event held online and all across the world. It is designed to bring communities together to translate WordPress into their local languages, and to help them connect with other communities doing the same thing.

There have been three Translation Days since April 2016, and the fourth edition is in the planning stages now. The Polyglots team, who organizes these events, is currently looking for input on the date, format, and content for the event and would love some feedback from the community.

Write Succinctly

People don't like to read - they scan a page for keywords and only start reading when they find what they're looking for.

- Leverage tools like Yoast to optimize text readability, Page/SEO title, slug, and meta description to improve page rank
- One H1 per page, generally the page title
- Don't skip a heading level*

Music and art help get us past tragedies

From cubism to abstract impressionism, from bebop to hip-hop, art offers a new way to look at the world, a new way to hear the world or speak to it. Sometimes we embrace new perspectives. But at other times we reject them as if they are fast-moving cars, racing into our blind spots as we travel uncharted territory.

Animated by a throbbing hip-hop heart, the movie Blindspotting explores how we struggle to see others and how we struggle to be seen by others, how we are challenged to understand the things we see in all their nuances and complexity, the folly of only seeking to see what we think we already know and understand.
